SCHEDULING SAVINGS

Recruiters spend too much time with administrative tasks – reviewing applications, scheduling candidate interviews, and more. Tasks that get in the way of more strategic work, like building relationships with quality talent. When recruiters are too busy to connect on a human level with candidates, it hurts the hiring experience. How do talent acquisition teams find the balance to tackle these hiring challenges?

PHONE SCREEN SAVINGS

Gain more insight into candidates in far less time than a traditional phone interview. Candidates answer your questions on their own time and you review the completed phone interviews at your convenience. As a result, hear from more candidates, easily compare them, and never have to worry about scheduling early-round interviews again.

By moving to on-demand screening, either by video or phone, the reviewer can save time reviewing the interview if they want to move them forward OR remove from the process if they are not qualified, after just a few minutes.

TIME TO FILL

Top talent is only on the market for 10 days. Candidates, especially those with superior talent and experience, have more job opportunities than ever in today's market. In the intense race for the best talent, organizations need to move faster, reach further, and impress top candidates with the maturity of their process. Every delay is an opportunity for quality talent to look elsewhere.

Our clients are better able to assess candidates fit for hire, and provide transparency that allows a candidate to get a better idea of what it's like to work at a company in a specific role. These factors help candidates and hiring teams make better decisions about fit, which result in candidates being put in roles that are a better motivational and skill fit. This improved fit leads to improved retention and in many cases faster time to revenue for revenue-generating positions.
